

Walkie Talkie Headsets

Now that my kids are old enough to play outside by themselves, I needed a convenient way to keep track of them. They're still too young to have their own cell phones, and buying one for each of them would have been far too expensive anyway. I talked to some other parents in the neighborhood to see how they dealt with this issue, and was surprised to learn that many of them use walkie talkie headsets to stay in contact with their children.

I'd always thought walkie talkie headsets were only for police officers and security guards, so I never even considered them for my family. But the more I read about all the different uses, the more I realized that they were perfect for us. In addition to monitoring the kids while they're out playing around the neighborhood, we'd be able to use our walkie talkie headsets while on vacation, while riding our motocross bikes and ATVs, and while camping.

We often take vacations to theme parks like Six Flags or Disney World. Those places offer a lot of fun and exciting attractions, which makes it very tempting for our children to wander away from us. This would ordinarily lead to anxiety and a frantic search, but if we all had our own walkie talkie headsets, it would be a piece of cake to meet up with each other at a designated spot.

The same holds true when we're out riding our motocross bikes and ATVs. The tracks and trails we go to are often in isolated areas that get very little traffic, which makes riding much safer since we don't have to worry about cars. At the same time, however, things can become a bit scary if one person gets separated from the pack or crashes without anyone noticing it. This has happened a few times in the past, and we had to backtrack a long way in order to find stragglers from our party. A walkie talkie headset would make it simple for a downed rider to contact someone else in the group for help.

Walkie talkie headsets would also be useful while camping, hiking, skiing, snowboarding, or doing anything else where there's a chance of getting lost or injured, so they're well worth buying -- and are quite affordable, too. I found several sporting goods websites that offer nice discounts on these products, so I've already gone ahead and placed my order.

I ended up buying five mid-range walkie talkie headsets for the price of one trendy cell phone, which made my decision an absolute no-brainer. Plus, unlike cell phones, I never have to worry about monthly plans, service charges, roaming fees, or anything else. Our devices will work wherever we go, with no additional charges ever.

If your family is as active as mine is, then you have to check out some walkie talkie headsets today. They're an easy, fun, and affordable way to help your family stay connected -- and safe!