The smallmouth bass got its name for the reason the rear end of its lower jaw does not expand past the eye, while the lower part of the jaw of a largemouth does. There is a low notch linking dorsal fins and the body often resembles dark broken bars.

The smallmouth bass typically matures about the age of three or four and can live up to ten to twelve years. On a light line, Ontario smallmouth bass fishing is a spectacular battler, and it is often jumping frequently and diving down into the depths. The average length for a smallmouth ranges between 10 and 20 inches. The Canadian record for the largest smallmouth bass is 10 pounds, 8 ounces caught in Ontario smallmouth bass fishing.

Crawling spinnerbaits or retriev-ing shallow-running crankbaits along the submerged weed patches also pay off. Bass of both species in deeper water can be taken with diving crankbaits, Largemouth tactics that work elsewhere are also effective in Ontario. Fishing differs from flip-and-pitch styles around the shallow, matted weeds, docks, and stumps, to thrilling top-water stroke on jerkbaits, poppers, and hovering plastic worms.

Ontario smallmouth bass fishing is the best place for you to go fishing. Here are some tips on how to enjoy your bass fishing:

First, you should always remember that a smallmouth bass has a very big difference from a largemouth bass! You need to approach it differently. Largemouth bass can be found around the thick weed beds, but the smallmouth bass rather hide out where the rock ledge drops off stridently. The popular baits are crawfish, minnow, leeches and hellgrammites. You can try using everything that resembles a minnow such as plastic worms and flag flies.

You should always remember that in Ontario smallmouth bass fishing, it is often grouped together by size. Now, if you find a smaller-sized group, there will hardly ever be a bigger smallmouth amongst them. If you' are dropping a live bait from your boat, the more permissible lines is the better. The Lower minnows or crayfish down will be directly.

The season like Mid June throughout fall is the perfect time for catching yourself a big smallmouth! During Mid-June, the smallmouths are found on the beds, by fall they are found in 10 to 15 foot depths under. The enthusiastic angler should group rattletraps, cranks and jigs, and always make sure to use a marker buoy to stay with the school properly.

Now if you want to go fishing, Ontario smallmouth bass fishing is the best idea that you can have.
