Nowadays coffee shops are everywhere and if you are out shopping no matter where you go today when looking for a cup of coffee, you will be sure to see an espresso coffee pod maker somewhere near by. Espressos are served up daily to millions of people all over the world. The first real working espresso coffee maker to make its appearance was said to have been in Italy in 1935. It was called The Illetta, invented by Francesco Illy but the espresso coffee pod maker is a relatively new concept in making coffee.

Espresso coffee pod makers can be found in many households and there are so many different varieties to choose from. With so many different types of coffee; you want to make sure you have the right machine to make the perfect cup. You will need a commercial size espresso coffee pod maker if its main use will be in such establishments as restaurants or coffee shops but a far smaller more compact model can be used at home.

Some of the Espresso coffee pod makers use steam to create the perfect cup of espresso and you can get espresso machines that come with or without the wand that makes the top of the coffee frothy for cappuccinos. There are also Steam pressure style machines which are made of aluminum, so these are an ideal lightweight machine. The pump style espresso maker is not as convenient as the new espresso coffee pod maker but both will provide you with a high quality cup of coffee.

If you have a very busy lifestyle you should not be without an espresso coffee maker and especially a espresso coffee pod maker. With all the new varieties of coffee coming up everyday, you will want a good quality machine to make the most of your coffee. Espresso coffee pod makers are easier and quicker to use as the correct amount of coffee is already prepared in a small disc shaped pod which you just insert into the coffee pod machine and most of the newer machines will give you the option to make many delicious creations. From plain espressos to the frothiest lattes or cappuccinos, and even tea, a coffee pod maker is a must have for your kitchen.
