

How the car donation process works

You'll find that there is a waiting period in order for the deal to be done and over with. You'll find that once you start the paper work, you'll be able to get the donation process over within a few weeks. You'll also find that it kind of depends on the organization on how quickly the matter is taken care of. You'll want to keep in mind that once you have selected the charity of your choice, you'll be able to do all the arrangements in person or over the phone.

All you have to do is fill out a form that will ask you to provide proof of the title. This is just a precaution to protect both parties. You'll find that they will then come and tow the car or they will call you with other arrangements. You'll need to fill out the 4303 form for the tax deduction. You'll also want to keep in mind that it may take several weeks in order for the car to find a permanent home. This will take some time, but it is quicker if the charity just keeps the car for a profit.

Most of the time, your car's value will truly determine rather or not this is going to be a quick process. You'll find that a good and worthy car will be sold within a week or so. This will help your case greatly. You'll want to keep in mind that the charity will help sell the car as quickly as possible. This is the goal of the organization. However, you'll want to check in every now and then to keep an update on the progression of your donation. The condition of the car sometimes will affect the way that the donation is handled.
