Unfortunately, it's a problem that many of us have faced at one time or another. The death of the cellular phone battery. But a dead cell phone battery doesn't have to be the end of the world and certainly doesn't require you to run out and purchase a brand new phone. That can be extremely expensive and isn't necessary.

In this brief article, I'll give you some tips on what to do the next time your cellular phone battery dies. Hopefully this overview will save you some time and money and show you exactly what your options are if you find yourself with this problem.

The first thing you need to do is check with your cellular phone service provider to see if the phone you purchased from them is under warranty. If the mobile phone is still covered under the manufacturers warranty or if you pay for cellular insurance, they should replace the battery without any questions.

The next option you have is to purchase a new battery. The best place to buy cell phone batteries for cheap is eBay. Online auction or classified sites typically offer the best deals when it comes to cell phones and accessories.

Last but not least, you could always use eBay to simply buy a replacement phone. This is a great alternative if you're tired of your existing cellular handset and want to upgrade it or simply don't want to invest any money into fixing it.

Hopefully this short article has given you some great ideas on what to do if your cellular phone battery bites the dust. While your initial reaction might be to panic, replacing cell phone batteries doesn't have to be expensive. Remember, just because your phone died doesn't mean that you need to run out and drop a few hundred dollars on a brand new handset.
