If you are one of the most extreme thrill-seekers, you may like the idea of bungy jumping to the top of an active volcano. Located in Pucon, Chile, you can bungy jump from a helicopter to within seven hundred feet from the molten lava. You will, of course, be accompanied in the helicopter by both a trained bungy jumping professional and a photographer. To add to the excitement, this trip includes traveling thirty-five miles to the volcano at high speed and high altitude while on the outside of the helicopter. This would certainly be an unforgettable initiation into the sport of bungy jumping.

Perhaps your preference leans more toward a great bungy jumping experience without the death-defying risks, if so, you might like to try the sport in California's Angeles National Forest. In thirteen years of business, Bungee America's jumpers have not had any injuries, and has an excellent safety record. This bungy jumping is done from a ten-stories-high bridge. You will be able to do front-flips, back-flips, back dive, front dive, or the elevator drop; and you can choose between one and five jumps.

Located in Northern California, Icarus Bungee also has a perfect safety record. The bridges which they use for bungy jumping are all a minimum of one hundred twenty feet in height, and some are considerably higher. All of the bridges they use for bungy jumping are in beautiful locations, which is a wonderful addition to the enjoyment of the bungy jumping trip.
