

Title:

Entrepreneurial Myths: The Truth Behind Them

Word Count:

1012

Summary:

There are typical barriers that so called friends and advisors, put in your way if you are thinking of starting a business. The barriers to starting a business are built on the back of myths about the pitfalls and challenges which surround running your own business. We take a look at some of these myths and reveal them to be exactly that ... just myths!

Keywords:

start up myths

Article Body:

If you are about to start off in business you will have no doubt heard these comments:

"So many businesses fail. Why are you doing this?"

"I hear that you need a large amount of money to get a business off the ground these days."

"Why are you throwing away the security of your job?"

These, and more of the same, are typical of the barriers that so called friends and advisors, put in your way if you are thinking of starting a business. These barriers are built on the back of myths about the pitfalls and challenges which surround running your own business.

In this article, we'll take a look at some of these myths and reveal them to be exactly that ... just myths! Don't get me wrong, being an entrepreneur can be tough and there are hurdles to cross, but let's bring some common sense into the debate!

You Don't Have a Personal Life

Yes you will! It can be hard juggling the responsibilities of running your own business and spending time with the family, but at the end of the day, you are going to have far more flexibility with your personal life, than any employee will ever have. The real issue is, do you have the time management and planning skills to get things done, thereby allowing you time to spend with your family.

You Have To Be Cunning and Ruthless To Be a Successful Entrepreneur

Ok, it may help you in the short term but this is not a sound, long term strategy. To be a successful entrepreneur you need to build relationships with both customers and suppliers who will stick by you during the rough times. Being ruthless over pricing may get you one or two good deals but you are unlikely to build a lasting and profitable relationship. Your aim should be to strike a balance between what you want and what your customer or supplier wants.

You Won't Have To Work As Hard

Your current job may be stressful and subject you to long hours. The idea of running your own business is appealing because you can slow down and take life at your own pace. To a degree this is true but there's no getting away from the fact that it will be hard work. Most small businesses don't achieve profitability until year 3 and so it's a long slog. Remember, if was easy, everyone would be doing it!

What does make the difference though, is that you are finally doing something you love and so the hours and the struggles don't seem like hard work at all. So perhaps this myth may be true after all!

You Have To Have an Original Idea

No you don't. Most businesses are built around a central idea. The difference is usually how it's delivered. The core products of all fast food places are the same, as are clothes shops, newsagents etc. You can make a decent living effectively copying someone else's idea but done in a slightly different way. Don't be put off by the doomsayers who will gleefully point out that "it's been done before". Your response should be, 'Great! That shows the idea works!'

You Will Be Your Own Boss

No way! There's only one boss in your new business ... the customer. They are essential to your success. When you were working for that large, faceless Corporation, the loss of the odd client wasn't that big a deal - plenty more where they came from.

In your new world you have to do whatever it takes to keep your customers and keep them happy. The customer is the one who calls the tunes. You have to listen and take note, before someone else does. However, at the end of the day, when all their demands are met, then perhaps you can have some time to yourself and enjoy the pleasures of being your own boss after all!

You Need A lot Of Money To Get a Business Off The Ground

Some businesses do need a fair bit of cash to get moving but there are many areas you can go into without the need to invest in a large amount of stock, machinery or equipment. The low-capital businesses involve the use of three very cheap commodities - your brain power, your knowledge and your time.

A business where you sell your expertise, not actual goods, to other people can be cheaply set up and carry high profit margins. All you may need is a PC, a desk and a telephone line. What's stopping you?

You Only Have To Do What You Want To Do

Unfortunately this myth is wrong. We all have areas or skills in which we excel and it's this expertise which usually forms the basis of your business. Your dedication to paperwork, bank statements and the VAT man may not be that high, but branching out on your own doesn't mean you have the choice to avoid these terrible tasks.

Whilst you were able to do this when you were sitting in the big corporate office, you can no longer hide. These tasks have to be done otherwise the deck of cards can start to collapse.

If you do have serious misgivings on certain areas, marketing for example, then consider taking a course to improve your skills. If it's something you seriously can't do, then go and find someone to do it for you - don't hope it will go away because it won't.

You will have seen that some of the myths not being true is good news and others not so good news! Be sensible in considering the myths which are thrown at you. See it for what they are - comments from people who don't know what they are talking about! In the next issue I'll have some more myth-busting ideas for you.