

Title:

How Is Your Cash Flow And Factoring

Word Count:

301

Summary:

How did your company do this month with the cash flow? Why not let the question go; how has your cash flow been this year?

Did you sweat it out worrying you might not make payroll, get that vendor off your back, pay that tax bill that was due and it was a lot more than you expected?

For those of you that have a line of credit, did you get close to maxing out your line and have concerns that your line of credit is no longer an adequate facility.

For those of you that ...

How did your company do this month with the cash flow? Why not let the question go; how has your cash flow been this year?

Did you sweat it out worrying you might not make payroll, get that vendor off your back, pay that tax bill that was due and it was a lot more than you expected?

For those of you that have a line of credit, did you get close to maxing out your line and have concerns that your line of credit is no longer an adequate facility.

For those of you that use your personal money or credit cards to fund your cash flow, did you have moments you thought about getting a loan or a line of credit from the bank because the pressure is mounting, but you still are unable to get the banks to lend to the money.

For those of you that have been sailing on smooth waters lately but you can see the approaching storm over the horizon and you dread approaching your bank "again" for an increase because they complained the last time because your growth is heavily centered around accounts receivables and they are getting uncomfortable.

Well, you may say that the checks seem to always come in the mail just in time to get you over the hump. I say, just keep throwing the dice, the numbers will not come up one day if you keep pushing your luck!

I could obviously continue with the examples but you get the point. The fact of the matter is that Factoring could be your solution for these and most scenarios when it comes to inadequate cash flow. Get informed about this form of finance and spread the word to your business associates. It could be what they are looking for also!
