You can also get Clay County Missouri child protection service through the Child Support facility of the court. Child Support is the payment ordered by the court. One parent can order this facility to the custodial parent with the help of the court after separation or divorce. Generally, the sum of support is based on the earnings of both parents, the expenses of the custodial parent, the number of children and any special requirements of the child.

In many states, the amount is determined by a chart, which factors in all these figures. It may also include health plan coverage, school tuition or other expenses, and may be reduced during periods of extended visitation such as summer vacations.

Child support generally continues until the child reaches 18 years, graduates from high school, is emancipated (no longer lives with either parent), or, in some cases, continues after the child reaches 18, such as during college attendance.
