Free Spyware Software: Use it for the good

The term spyware software always creates a nasty image. When computer users hear of this word, they would always get the fearful sensations tickling their nerves. Why not? Spyware softwares are after revealed to be on the negative side! Someone who installs a spyware software into any unit of computer is branded to be a hacker. True indeed. Spyware software applications are used for hacking, tracking, detecting, stealing of identification details, credit account numbers, passwords, and many other heinous deeds.

But let us also give the spyware software some benefit of the doubt. There are actually some states in America that tolerate the use of spyware software programs because the administrators believe that there is goodness in its usage. For one, the spyware softwares are used always for spouse monitoring, child monitoring, and the detection of the activities of the employees of big firms. Child monitoring through the use of spyware software programs aim at detecting the websites which the child often visits and the people that he or she often chats with. Spouse monitoring is geared towards tracking the chat conversations done by either of the couple. In the business industry, it is a must that the big bosses of the company are aware of the productivity rate of their employees. So they rather prefer to monitor the computer activities of their subordinates. Through the spyware software, the employees refuse to go idle. But then some states in America condemn the sale of spyware software and they even hold it up as one serious crime.

Generally, the spyware software comes in various names such as keylogger, PC monitoring, PC surveillance, and many others. But whatever the name used is, there is only one aim that surfaces when we talk of spyware software—the recording of the computer user's activities. This includes the recording of the passwords, visited websites, chat conversations, and every little act done in the computer. It is like having a movie director who watches the acting of the computer user. The spy then gets to read with you as you browse through your mails and as you open any account of yours. It is like sharing your personal details with another party. Talk about hackers! The only thing about the spyware software is that it does not have to go through several procedures of opening or using your account since every little key that you type in is recorded.

Because of the bad image that gets stuck in the reputation of the spyware software, most people are having negative impressions of it. It is then upon the user of the spyware software to use it for the good. But then if the goal would be to pose destruction on other people, it will not be a really good idea to
